Success Tips #23

The Winning Edge

What constitutes a Winning Edge? A great performance? A captivating personality? A desire to work? Excellent marketing skills? All of the above? Being a winner means believing in yourself and not apologizing.

To get that winning edge, we need to recognize weaknesses in ourselves, and work to overcome them. When we work at it, the things we apologize for can become our strengths; the reasons WHY we are hired!

The following is a list of excuses actors often apologize for:

The Demo - Do you have a demo or does your current one need updating?

Acting - Are you at a competitive acting level when auditioning against established, working actors?

Marketing - Are you waiting for the work to come to you? Or, are you actively searching for work?

Training - Do you have a full spectrum of training in voice, acting, and improv?

Limited Comfort Zone - Are you afraid to embrace new challenges?

Organization - Does time get past you because you don't have a business plan?

Don't settle for less or plateau. Why not challenge yourself! A twinkle in the eye or confidence in your walk shows others that you've got that desired Winning Edge!
