Success Tips #33

Home Recording - Part II

Now that you've got an audio program like Audacity, Sound Forge, or Adobe Audition on your computer, you need a microphone. USB condenser mics allow you to plug your mic directly into your computer.

The BLUE Snowball sells for less than $100 and comes bundled with a table stand and USB cord. Out of the box, you're ready to go! ALESIS also has a USB-Microphone Podcasting Kit.

For just $30 more, the SAMSON C01UK USB Mic comes with a Shock Mount and Stand. Two other mics (without stand and shock mount) include the SAMSON G-Track USB Recording Microphone with Line/Instrument Inputs and Direct Headphone Monitoring and the MXL USB.006 Large Diaphragm Condensor Microphone with USB Connector.

In the $230 range, the RODE Podcaster USB Broadcast Microphone has excellent reviews.

For $400, SE-Electronics has the USB2200a Studio Condenser Microphone with Headphone Monitoring.

If you want to convert a condenser microphone to be used with a laptop, try out the CEEntrance, Inc. MicPort Pro USB Microphone Preamp. Only $130 and you're ready to go.

Got a larger microphone budget? Try the Neumann U87, Sennheiser 416, or the AKG 414. What ever your budget, choose a microphone that best suits your voice.
