Success Tips #30

Studying Outside the Classroom

In school, teachers and coaches offer great tips and techniques. When you leave the classroom, how do you continue studying? Here are some simple things to do:

- Make the world your classroom. Parks, malls and supermarkets are rich with diverse personality types. Observe behavior and copy it.
  - Study performances of great actors. Define what makes them unique. If you were cast in the same role, would you be able to add the same depth?
  - Increase your imagination. A highly developed imagination is a vital skill for an actor. Daydream and create "as if" situations for your characters.
  - Read books about your craft and biographies about great actors. [Next month we'll give you a list of acting books that we highly recommend.]
  - Study advertising trends. Search information online. Actively watch and listen to commercials. Take time to figure out what style of spot it is.
  - Using copy from class, find 10 different ways to perform each script. Analyze what works and what doesn't. Continue exploring "WHY?"
- Improvement comes through practice. Use what you learn. If you don't use it, you lose it.
